The story of pizza · Preguntas 9 a 14

Pizza is one of the most famous foods in the world, but it was born as a cheap meal for poor people. In the city of Naples, in Italy, workers needed food that was quick and easy to eat with one hand. Bakers sold flat bread with cheese, tomatoes and a little oil on top, and people ate it in the street while they walked. For many years, rich families did not eat pizza because they thought it was a poor man's food. This idea changed in 1889. Queen Margherita visited Naples, and a famous baker made a special pizza for her with tomato, white cheese and green basil — the three colours of the Italian flag. The queen loved it, and that pizza still has her name today. Pizza travelled to the United States with Italian families who moved there to find work. At first only those families ate it, but after the Second World War many soldiers came home from Italy wanting more. Soon pizza shops opened in every big city, and the dish became popular all over the country. Today people eat pizza on every continent, and each place adds its own favourite toppings.

Bakers sold flat bread with cheese, tomatoes and a little oil on top, and people ate it in the street while they walked.

For many years, rich families did not eat pizza because they thought it was a poor man's food. This idea changed in 1889. Queen Margherita visited Naples, and a famous baker made a special pizza for her with tomato, white cheese and green basil — the three colours of the Italian flag. The queen loved it, and that pizza still has her name today.

Pizza travelled to the United States with Italian families who moved there to find work. At first only those families ate it, but after the Second World War many soldiers came home from Italy wanting more. Soon pizza shops opened in every big city, and the dish became popular all over the country. Today people eat pizza on every continent, and each place adds its own favourite toppings.

At the beginning, pizza was a meal for

- A. rich families.
- B. poor workers.

C. soldiers.

10 Workers in Naples liked this food because it was

- A. quick and easy to eat with one hand.
- B. very expensive and special.
- C. only sold inside restaurants.

11 The special pizza made for Queen Margherita had three colours because they

- A. were the queen's favourite colours.
- B. made the pizza taste better.
- C. were the colours of the Italian flag.

12 Pizza arrived in the United States with

- A. Italian families looking for work.
- B. the Queen of Italy.
- C. famous bakers from Naples.

13 After the Second World War, pizza became more popular in the US because

- A. the queen visited the country.
- B. it became cheaper than bread.
- C. soldiers came home from Italy wanting more.

14 The last sentence suggests that, around the world, pizza

- A. always tastes exactly the same.
- B. is prepared with different toppings in each place.
- C. is still only eaten in Italy.

A day in the life of a marine biologist · Preguntas 15 a 19

We asked Laura Méndez, a marine biologist, to tell us about her work. What does your job involve? My main task is to study the health of the coral reefs near our coast. Every week I dive with my team to count fish, photograph the corals and take small water samples. Back in the laboratory we test the water and compare the photos with older ones to see what has changed. Is it a difficult job? It can be. You must be patient, because corals grow very slowly and the results of our work are not visible from one year to the next. You also have to be comfortable in the sea in any weather. But for me the hardest part is talking to people who do not believe the reef is in danger. Who do you work with? I work with a small group of young scientists and, very often, with local fishermen. The fishermen know the sea better than anyone, and they share information that we could never collect alone. In return, we teach their children why the reef matters. Many of these children had never used a diving mask before, and now some of them want to become biologists too. That, more than any award, is what makes me proud of my job.

A day in the life of a marine biologist

We asked Laura Méndez, a marine biologist, to tell us about her work.

What does your job involve?

My main task is to study the health of the coral reefs near our coast. Every week I dive with my team to count fish, photograph the corals and take small water samples. Back in the laboratory we test the water and compare the photos with older ones to see what has changed.

Is it a difficult job?

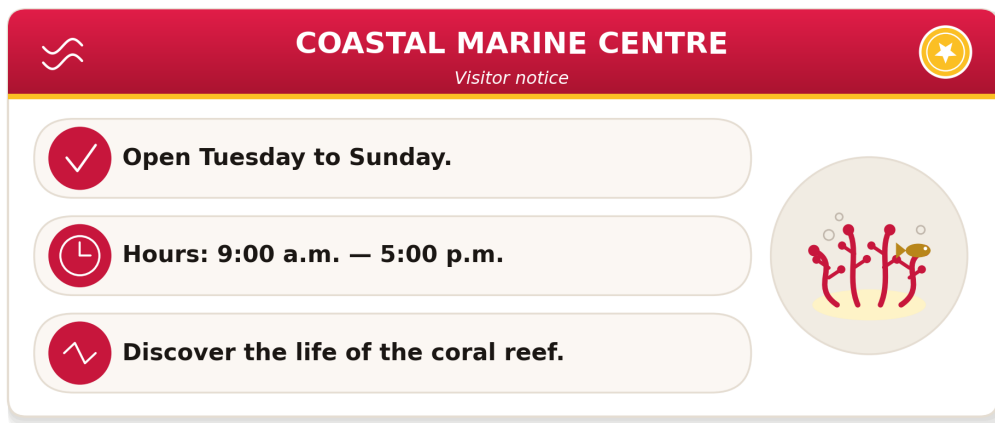

It can be. You must be patient, because corals grow very slowly and the results of our work are not visible from one year to the next. You also have to be comfortable in the sea in any weather. But for me the hardest part is talking to people who do not believe the reef is in danger.

Who do you work with?

I work with a small group of young scientists and, very often, with local fishermen. The fishermen know the sea better than anyone, and they share information that we could never collect alone. In return, we teach their children why the reef matters. Many of these children had never used a diving mask before, and now some of them want to become biologists too. That, more than any award, is what makes me proud of my job.

A notice from a local marine centre is shown below.

What is the writer mainly doing in this interview?

- A. advertising diving courses for tourists
- B. explaining how to take photographs underwater
- C. complaining about the bad weather at sea
- D. describing a scientist's daily work and what she values

16 For Laura, the hardest part of her job is

- A. diving in cold water every week.
- B. comparing old and new photographs.
- C. convincing people that the reef is in danger.
- D. counting all the fish near the coast.

17 Why are the local fishermen useful to Laura's team?

- A. They pay for the team's equipment.
- B. They share information that the team could not collect alone.
- C. They take the photographs of the corals.
- D. They test the water in the laboratory.

18 The last paragraph mainly shows that Laura's work also

- A. inspires local children to value the reef.
- B. earns her many important awards.
- C. makes the fishermen leave the coast.
- D. stops scientists from diving together.

19 According to the reading, the most appropriate piece of advice Laura might give a young person is:

- A. "Choose this job only if you want to become famous."
- B. "Be patient and work with your community to protect the sea."
- C. "Avoid the sea when the weather is bad and stay in the laboratory."
- D. "Do not listen to local people, because scientists know best."
