Helping at the School Library · Preguntas 6 a 10

Lee el siguiente texto para responder lo que sigue.

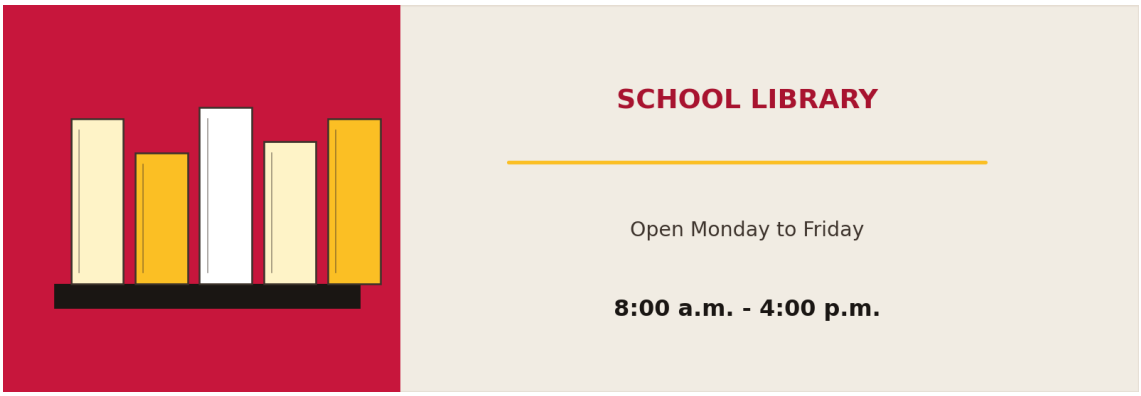

Helping at the school library is easier than most students think. The room is open from Monday to Friday, from 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., and the team asks each volunteer for only one free hour a week. Sadly, very few students sign up. Giving that hour is a good way to learn new skills and to feel part of the school. Look at what a volunteer gains.

Working at the library teaches you things you use later. You learn how the shelves are ordered, so you can find a book or an old magazine in seconds. You also learn to keep a record of what people borrow, and that habit makes your own notes clearer. After a few weeks, most volunteers finish their homework faster than before.

There are quieter rewards too. Putting the returned books back in place, in a silent room, can rest a worried mind in a few minutes. Some volunteers say that the hour at the desk helps them forget a hard exam for a while. Doing a small job well also gives you the feeling that the school needs you.

Helping at the library changes your week in another way. You work next to students from other grades, and you talk to the teachers who come for materials. Standing behind the desk shows that you care about your school, and your classmates notice it. Volunteers are invited to present the new titles at the morning assembly, and everybody listens. People remember the face behind the desk, so a volunteer soon has friends in every grade.

If you have one free hour, come to the desk and ask for the list; invite a classmate as well. One hour a week is a small gift with a big return. Learning while you help others is worth much more than it costs. It looks like a boring job at first, but it is not: you only need a little order, a soft voice and some patience.

6 What is the author doing in the text?

A. comparing library work with other school duties
B. describing the problems of working after classes
C. encouraging students to help at the school library
D. explaining why some books get lost in the library

7 What can the reader find out about library work in paragraph 2?

A. how library work lets you talk to the teachers
B. how library work improves your own study habits
C. how library work lets you meet students from other grades
D. how library work calms a worried mind

8 According to paragraph 3, what can library work cause in people?

A. It makes them work faster than the librarian.
B. It can rest a worried mind in a few minutes.
C. It helps them remember every lesson of the day.
D. It makes them want to present books at the morning assembly.

9 What does library work do in a social situation?

A. It tells others that you always need help with your own homework.
B. It makes people think that you want to be a teacher.
C. It makes other students borrow the same books as you.
D. It shows you care about your school and brings you friends.

10 Which is the best advertisement for the author's ideas about library work?

A. Want to spend your evenings alone? Stay in the library after four o'clock. It will make you tired, worried, and lonely every week.
B. Want to finish hard books in a hurry? Work at the library after class. It will make you look busier, quieter, and more important than others.
C. Want to learn and feel useful? Give one hour a week to the library. It will improve your study habits, rest your mind, and bring friends.
D. Want to have power? Work at the desk every day. It lets you choose who can borrow books, win prizes, and miss your own classes.

From the Pod to Your Cup · Preguntas 20 a 25

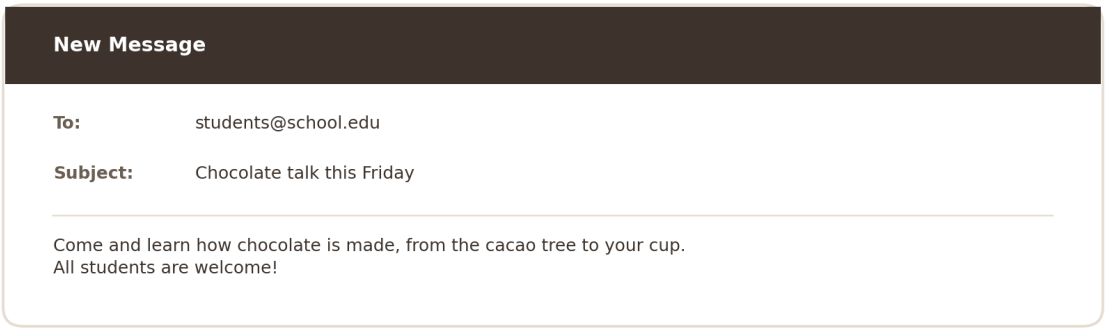

Lee el siguiente texto.

Every bar of chocolate starts as a fruit. The cacao tree gives heavy pods, and inside each pod there are about forty seeds. Growers open the pods and dry the seeds in the sun. Almost all the sacks come from warm lands near the Equator: Ivory Coast harvests more cacao than anyone else, Ghana is in second place and Indonesia in third.

Two things keep chocolate on the shopping list of many homes. The first one is its sweet flavour, which almost every child likes. The second one is heat: a cup of hot chocolate warms a person from the inside in a few minutes. Making that cup at home takes only three things: cacao, sugar and hot milk. That is why families in the cold towns of the mountains drink it at breakfast and again at night.

Chocolate was not always sweet. The Maya and the Aztecs were already drinking it when nobody in Europe knew the plant, and they made it with water and chilli, without a single spoon of sugar. Some people say that Christopher Columbus made chocolate famous in Europe, but this is not true. It was the Spanish who took cacao to Spain, mixed it with sugar and turned it into a warm drink for rich houses.

Today the shelves are full of bars, but chocolate also goes into cakes, biscuits and a dark sauce that cooks in Oaxaca serve with meat. A good bar has few ingredients, only cacao, sugar and cocoa butter, so it can wait for months in a cupboard without losing its flavour. That is the last stop of a journey that begins inside a pod.

20 The second country in the cacao harvest is

A. Ivory Coast.
B. Indonesia.
C. Ghana.

21 People love chocolate because it

A. needs cold milk.
B. has a sweet flavour.
C. is hard to make.

22 According to paragraph 2, what makes a warm cup of chocolate popular where the weather is cold?

A. It can be bought in every shop in the town.
B. It is prepared without sugar.
C. It warms a person from the inside.

23 According to paragraph 3, what did the Spanish do with cacao?

A. They carried cacao to Spain and added sugar to it.
B. They gave cacao to other kings to become famous.
C. They planted cacao trees in their gardens.

24 According to the text, who made chocolate famous in Europe?

A. The Maya
B. Christopher Columbus
C. The Spanish

25 Good chocolate can be kept for a long time because it

A. is mixed with spices.
B. has few ingredients.
C. is only sold in bars.
