The night market of Silvia

Every Tuesday, long before the sun comes up, the small town of Silvia changes completely. At four in the morning the trucks arrive from the farms in the mountains, and by five the square is already full of people. This is the night market, and it has worked in the same way for more than sixty years.

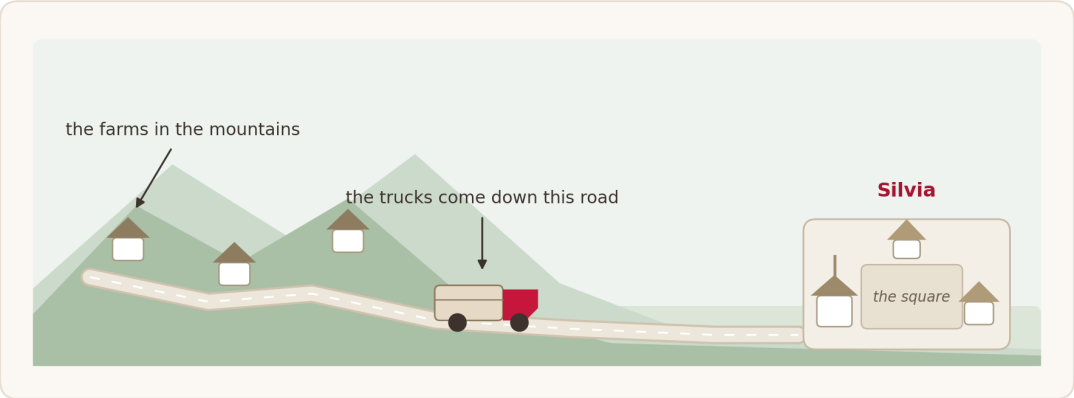

The sellers do not use tables. They put their products on cloths on the ground: potatoes, onions, herbs, and above all the flowers that the region is famous for. Prices are not written anywhere. Buyers and sellers agree on a price by talking, and the same basket of potatoes may cost a little more at five o'clock than at seven, when there is less demand.

Most of the sellers are women, and many of them travel for two hours to get there. They wear blue skirts and black hats, and they speak Namtrik, the language of the Misak people, among themselves. With the buyers, they speak Spanish.

By nine in the morning the square is empty again. The cloths are folded, the last trucks leave, and the town returns to its normal life. Visitors who arrive at ten see nothing but a quiet square and never understand why people talk so much about the market of Silvia.

9 According to the text, what time do the trucks arrive from the farms?

A. At four in the morning.
B. At five in the morning.
C. At seven in the morning.
D. At nine in the morning.

10 According to the second paragraph, the products of the market are displayed

A. on the wooden tables that the trucks bring from the farms.
B. on cloths spread on the ground, and not on tables of any kind.
C. inside the trucks, which stay in the square until nine o'clock.
D. in the small shops that open around the square before dawn.

11 According to the text, the way of buying and selling in Silvia is not a recent invention, because the market

A. was started by the first visitors who came from the coast.
B. changed all its rules ten years ago and follows them today.
C. opens for two hours only, as it did when it was created.
D. has kept the same way of working for over sixty years.

12 According to the third paragraph, the sellers do not use the same language all the time: they speak

A. Namtrik among themselves and Spanish with the buyers.
B. Spanish among themselves and Namtrik with the buyers.
C. Namtrik with everybody, including the visitors of the town.
D. Spanish in the square and English with the foreign visitors.

13 Why may a basket of potatoes cost a little more at five o'clock than at seven?

A. Because the potatoes are fresher at five in the morning.
B. Because the sellers pay more for transport early in the morning.
C. Because at seven there is less demand for the products.
D. Because prices are written on the cloths before five.

14 A visitor wants to see the market at its busiest and needs to know when to leave home if the trip takes two hours. According to the text, the visitor should

A. leave at eight, because the market is busiest at ten in the morning.
B. leave at three, because the market is busiest around five in the morning.
C. leave at seven, because the trucks leave the square at nine.
D. leave on Wednesday, because the market changes the town completely.

A letter to the school newspaper

Dear editor,

I read with interest last month's article about the new rule that bans mobile phones during the whole school day. The article said that most students were against it. I am a student, and I was against it too, so I want to explain why I changed my mind.

For the first two weeks I was sure the rule was unfair. I kept looking at the empty pocket where my phone used to be. In class I was not really listening; I was waiting for the bell so I could check my messages. It felt like the school did not trust us.

Then something strange happened. During the third week I noticed that the corridors were noisy again. People were talking to each other, not scrolling. In my class, two boys who had never said a word to each other spent a whole lunch break arguing about football. I finished a book I had started in April.

I still think the school made a mistake in the way it announced the rule. Nobody asked us. A decision that changes our day should be explained and discussed with us first, and that is a serious complaint that I do not withdraw.

But I no longer believe the rule itself is wrong. I only wish someone had told me, at the beginning, what I was going to get in exchange for what I was losing.

Ana María, grade 11

15 What is the writer mainly doing in this letter?

A. explaining why she changed her opinion about a rule she once rejected
B. asking the school to cancel the rule that bans mobile phones
C. describing the activities that students do during lunch breaks
D. complaining about an article that the newspaper published last month

16 How did the writer feel during the first two weeks?

A. Relieved, because she could finally concentrate in class.
B. Curious, because she wanted to know what would happen next.
C. Restless, because she kept thinking about her phone instead of listening.
D. Grateful, because the school had explained the reasons for the rule.

17 What made the writer start to change her mind?

A. A teacher explained to her the reasons behind the new rule.
B. She noticed that people around her had started talking to each other again.
C. The school newspaper published an article supporting the rule.
D. Her parents took her phone away at home as well as at school.

18 Which criticism does the writer still keep at the end of the letter?

A. That the rule takes away too many hours of the school day.
B. That students learn less when they cannot use their phones.
C. That the school did not ask or explain before announcing the rule.
D. That the newspaper did not publish the opinion of the students.

19 When the writer says she wishes someone had told her what she was going to get in exchange for what she was losing, she means that

A. the school should have paid the students for giving up their phones.
B. the benefits of the rule became clear only after living with it.
C. she would have accepted the rule if her phone had been returned.
D. the article of the newspaper should have been longer and clearer.

The woman who mapped the ocean floor

Parte 5. Lee el siguiente texto y escoge la palabra que completa correctamente cada espacio numerado.

For most of history, nobody knew what the bottom of the ocean looked like. In the 1950s, an American geologist called Marie Tharp (20) _____ out to change that. She was not allowed on the research ships, because at that time women were considered bad luck at sea, so she stayed in the laboratory in New York.

Her colleagues sent her thousands of measurements of the depth of the Atlantic. Tharp turned those numbers (21) _____ drawings. Slowly, a shape appeared: a long mountain range running down the middle of the ocean, with a deep valley along the top of it.

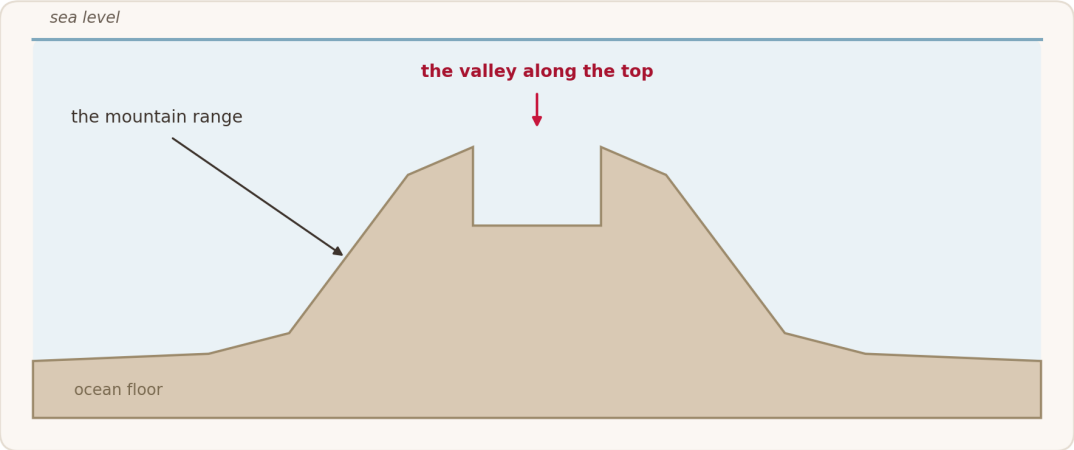

When she showed the valley to her colleague Bruce Heezen, he said it was «girl talk» and asked her to check again. She checked. The valley (22) _____ there. It took almost a year (23) _____ him to accept the result, which turned out to be one of the strongest pieces of evidence for the movement of the continents.

Tharp continued drawing for thirty years. Her maps were published all over the world, but for a long time her name (24) _____ printed on them. Today the valley she found is (25) _____ studied by scientists all over the world.
